The Advance of Years.

Victor Hugo once confessed to a close friend that the most disagreeable advance in age to him had been that from "But," commented his companion, "I should think it a great deal better to be 40 than to be 50." To which the great Frenchman gayly re-"Not at all; 40 is the old age of youth, while 50 is the youth of old

A Wire Runner.

It is said that one of the electric lighting companies has adopted an in-genious scheme for carrying its wires through the underground conduit. A small terrier has been so trained that when a light cord is attached to him he runs through the tube to the next out let, and is, in fact, the most expert "wire runner" in the country. After each performance he is treated to some favorite morsel, and thus he has con to look on his work as a most enjoyable pastime. -Pittsburgh Dispatch
